

Perry Farrell puts his Venice home on the market

The Jane's Addiction rocker is selling his three-bedroom house, which has Asian influences and a rooftop terrace. Asking price: $1.6 million.

March 23, 2010 | By Lauren Beale, Los Angeles Times

Alternative rocker Perry Farrell of the band Jane's Addiction has listed his home in Venice for $1.6 million.

It was designed for the musician by architect Steven Ehrlich, who transformed the original bungalow on the site into a modern, Asian-influenced house with three bedrooms and two bathrooms in 2,203 square feet. A two-story barrel vault ceiling runs the length of the building, which has an open plan, a loft office and a roof-top terrace. A glass wall slides into a pocket wall, linking indoor and outdoor space. A three-car garage can double as a studio.

Frontman Farrell, 50, also led Porno for Pyros in the 1990s and Satellite Party after that. He co-created the Lollapalooza festival tour.

The listing agent is Allyson Carter of Rodeo Realty, Sherman Oaks.

lauren.beale@latimes.com

